1. Purpose and scope

This policy establishes fair, consistent, and documented practices for managing employees at Luxe by Madiha. It applies to recruitment, employment, attendance, leave, performance, training, workplace conduct, grievances, employee records, resignation, and exit procedures. Where contractors or temporary staff are covered by separate agreements, those agreements also apply.

2. Policy principles and responsibilities

• Apply employment decisions consistently, fairly, and based on job-related criteria.
• Treat employees with dignity and maintain a respectful workplace.
• Protect employee information and limit access to authorized personnel.
• Explain expectations, provide feedback, and document important decisions.
• Comply with applicable employment, wage, working-time, leave, safety, and anti-harassment requirements.
• Do not use this policy to remove any employee rights provided by applicable law or a signed employment agreement.

Management is responsible for approving staffing and employment decisions. Managers should follow this policy and keep appropriate records. Employees are expected to follow workplace procedures, communicate honestly, protect confidential information, and raise concerns in good faith.

3. Recruitment and selection

Recruitment should begin with a documented business need and approved role budget. Selection decisions must be based on relevant skills, experience, qualifications, work samples, and other lawful job-related criteria.

Standard recruitment steps

1. Approve the vacancy, role purpose, reporting line, budget, and employment type.
2. Prepare a clear job description and essential selection criteria.
3. Advertise accurately; do not make misleading claims about pay, hours, benefits, or career progression.
4. Review applications consistently against the stated criteria.
5. Conduct structured interviews and job-related assessments where appropriate.
6. Check references or credentials only where relevant and with appropriate authorization.
7. Document the selection rationale and obtain required approval.
8. Issue a written offer stating role, pay, start date, working hours, probation terms if applicable, benefits, reporting line, and key employment conditions.

Do not request or use personal information that is irrelevant to the role or unlawfully discriminate during hiring. Keep candidate information confidential and retain it only for an approved period.

4. Job descriptions and employment terms

Every role should have a written job description that includes:

• Job title, department, supervisor, and role purpose.
• Key responsibilities and decision-making authority.
• Required skills, experience, and qualifications.
• Working location, expected hours, and any approved flexible-work arrangement.
• Performance measures and initial priorities.
• Tools, access, training, and safety requirements.
• Employment type and any role-specific conditions.

Review job descriptions when duties, reporting lines, or business needs materially change. Discuss significant changes with the employee and document agreed updates in accordance with applicable law and contract terms.

5. Onboarding and probation

Before or on the employee's first working day, provide the employment documentation, reporting contact, role expectations, workplace rules, attendance and leave process, safety information, communication standards, and required system access.

Onboarding stage	Actions
Before start	Confirm signed offer/contract, start date, required documents, equipment, and access approvals.
First day / week	Introduce the team, explain role duties, policies, security, safety, data protection, and reporting routes.
First 30 days	Agree priorities, training needs, check-in schedule, and initial measures of success.
Probation review (if applicable)	Use documented job-related criteria, provide feedback, and communicate the outcome in writing before the relevant deadline.

Probation duration, extensions, notice, and confirmation must be stated in the employment terms and comply with applicable law. Probation should not be used to bypass legal protections.

6. Attendance, working hours, and punctuality

Management should communicate normal working days, hours, breaks, attendance recording method, remote-work expectations if applicable, and the process for lateness or absence. Employees should record attendance accurately and notify their manager as early as possible when delayed or unable to attend.

- Do not falsify attendance records or record time on behalf of another person.
- Managers should review attendance issues consistently and consider relevant context before taking action.
- Overtime, rest periods, and working-hour limits must follow applicable law and approved company arrangements.
- Medical or personal details should be requested only when reasonably necessary and handled confidentially.
- Any disciplinary response should be proportionate, documented, and consistent with employment terms and law.

7. Leave and absence management

The company should maintain a written leave schedule aligned with applicable law and employment agreements, including the relevant categories of annual, casual, sick, maternity/paternity or other statutory leave where applicable, public holidays, and unpaid leave.

- Employees should submit planned leave through the designated process with reasonable notice.
- Managers should approve or decline requests based on policy, staffing needs, fairness, and legal requirements, and communicate the decision promptly.
- For unexpected illness or emergencies, employees should notify their manager as soon as practicable.
- Keep an accurate leave balance and record approved leave.
- Do not penalize employees for exercising lawful leave rights. Medical information must be restricted to authorized personnel.

The exact leave entitlements, eligibility, accrual, carry-forward, documentation, and payment rules must be confirmed for the applicable jurisdiction and reflected in the employee handbook or contract.

8. Performance evaluation and feedback

Performance should be assessed against clear role-related objectives, quality standards, conduct expectations, and agreed deadlines. Feedback should be timely, specific, evidence-based, and respectful.

Review stage	Purpose
Regular check-ins	Discuss priorities, progress, blockers, workload, and support needed.
Monthly / quarterly review	Compare outcomes with agreed KPIs; discuss quality, collaboration, reliability, and development.
Formal review	Document strengths, improvement areas, goals, training actions, employee comments, and review date.
Performance improvement plan	Set measurable expectations, reasonable deadlines, support, and follow-up reviews when performance is below standard.

9. Training and development

Identify training needs during onboarding, check-ins, performance reviews, and changes in work processes. Training may include product knowledge, customer service, communication, systems, safety, data protection, leadership, and role-specific skills.

Managers should agree learning objectives, allocate appropriate time and resources, and evaluate whether training improves performance. Employees should participate in required training and raise additional development needs where relevant. Any reimbursement or training-bond terms must be written, reasonable, and legally compliant.

10. Equal opportunity and respectful workplace

Luxe by Madiha aims to provide equal opportunity and a workplace free from discrimination, harassment, bullying, intimidation, and retaliation. Employment decisions should be based on relevant qualifications, performance, conduct, and business needs, subject to applicable law.

Prohibited conduct includes slurs or discriminatory remarks, unwanted sexual conduct, threats, repeated humiliation, bullying, unfair retaliation for raising a concern, and other unwelcome behavior that undermines a safe and respectful workplace.

Employees should raise concerns through their manager, designated HR contact, or senior management. If the concern involves the usual contact, another appropriate reporting route must be available. Reports should be handled promptly, fairly, and as discreetly as practicable. Confidentiality cannot be absolute where disclosure is necessary to investigate or address the concern.

11. Grievance and disciplinary procedures

Grievance process

1. Raise the concern with a manager or designated HR contact, verbally or in writing.
2. The recipient records the issue, date, relevant facts, desired outcome, and any urgent safety or privacy concerns.
3. Acknowledge the grievance promptly and explain the next steps and expected review timeframe.
4. Review the matter impartially, hear relevant parties, and consider available evidence.
5. Communicate the outcome and any actions in writing where appropriate.
6. Provide a reasonable route to request review or appeal by a person not involved in the original decision, where practicable.

Disciplinary matters should be investigated fairly before a decision is made. The employee should be told the concern, given a reasonable opportunity to respond, and informed of the decision and any applicable review or appeal route. Actions must be proportionate, consistently applied, and compliant with law and contract terms.

No employee should suffer retaliation for raising a concern in good faith or participating honestly in a review. Knowingly false or malicious reports may be addressed through a fair process.

12. Confidential employee records and data protection

Employee records may include contact and emergency details, offer and contract documents, payroll and benefit records, attendance and leave, performance reviews, training, disciplinary or grievance records, and exit documentation.

- Collect only information needed for a legitimate employment or legal purpose.
- Limit access to authorized management, HR, payroll, or advisers with a genuine need to know.
- Use secure storage, appropriate access controls, and approved sharing methods.
- Do not discuss an employee’s private information in public or informal group chats.
- Correct inaccurate records through a documented process and handle requests in line with applicable law.
- Follow the approved retention and secure deletion schedule; preserve records where legally required or subject to an active matter.
- Report suspected loss, misdirection, or unauthorized access promptly.

13. Resignation and notice

Employees should submit resignation in writing to their manager or designated HR contact, stating the intended final working date. Management should acknowledge receipt, confirm the applicable notice period under the employment terms and law, and agree handover priorities.

Management should handle resignations professionally and without retaliation. Any change to notice, early release, payment in lieu, or other arrangements must be authorized, documented, and consistent with applicable law and contract terms.

14. Exit and handover procedures

Area	Exit action
Handover	Document open tasks, deadlines, client or supplier contacts, project status, and outstanding risks.
Company property	Collect keys, access cards, devices, samples, documents, and other company assets; record their return.
System access	Revoke or adjust email, CRM, cloud, social media, and other access at the appropriate time; preserve business records.
Final payments	Calculate outstanding salary, approved expenses, leave payments or deductions where lawful, and other amounts due; provide required documents.
Confidentiality	Remind the departing employee of continuing lawful confidentiality and data-handling obligations.
Exit feedback	Offer an optional exit discussion; record themes appropriately and avoid pressuring the employee.
Record closure	Complete a checklist, update personnel records, and store documents securely according to the retention schedule.

15. Employee exit checklist

Employee: _____ Role: _____ Final day: _____

- ■ Resignation / termination documentation completed
- ■ Handover reviewed and accepted
- ■ Company property returned or exceptions documented
- ■ System and physical access reviewed and revoked as appropriate
- ■ Final pay and expense reconciliation initiated/completed
- ■ Client / supplier responsibilities reassigned
- ■ Exit feedback offered
- ■ Records stored securely and retention requirements noted

16. Policy governance and approval

Management should review this policy annually and when employment practices or legal requirements change. Before adoption, confirm jurisdiction-specific rules on contracts, minimum wages, working hours, overtime, statutory leave, workplace harassment, termination, final settlement, and employee records.
